Secular Bioethics Contradicts Itself

Abstract: This note discusses Laici e cattolici in bioetica, by G. Fornero and M. Mori. Secular bioethics contradicts its own nature. Indeed, on the one hand it is not a relativistic theory because it doesn't propose a subjective but objective truth. There are two evidences to support this: the will of the secular world to present publicly their assumptions as truths and the imposition of secular perspectives through the law. On the other hand, the secular bioethics is not anti-metaphysical since it has its own metaphysics constituted by concepts such as self-determination, biographical value of life and so on.

Keywords: Relativism, Anti-metaphysics, Secular bioethics.
