

La filosofia è un sapere storico?

Is Philosophy Knowledge of History?

Abstract: Whether or not the analytic/continental divide in philosophy is tenable in theory, it certainly was very conspicuous in Italy in the second half of the last century. Moreover, there appears to be no reason to think that the scenario is going to change much in the future. Unlike present day analytic philosophers, Italian continental philosophers think that philosophy is not in the business of providing theories of phenomena that are true to the facts. They look askance at the very notion of truth, much as it was usual to do in the first two or three decades of the twentieth century.

Keywords: Analytic/continental divide, Truth, Relativism, History, History of philosophy.
