Philosophy of Nature. Ontology, Ethics, Law

Abstract: This essay discusses the relationship between nature and environment, with a view to highlighting some of the critical issues insisting on the theoretical proposal to describe nature in objective terms, in order to derive from it the moral and juridical duties that are capable of delineating an environmental philosophy. To this end, special emphasis is placed on the role of science, following the studies that have highlighted the political character of its knowledge processing.

Keywords: Nature, Environment, Science, Ontology.
