More on Person-Affecting Utilitarianism and Future Generations. A Response to Magni

Abstract: This paper is a response to Magni's second attempt to meet the objections I have previously raised against his utilitarian version of The Narrow Person-Affecting View. Expanding on my previous criticism, I maintain that his view does not solve The Non-Identity Problem, neither in cases of different people, nor in a certain class of cases of partially different people. Further, I argue that his view has the awkward implication that 'intrinsically better than' is not a transitive relation.

Keywords: Person-affecting consequentialism, Non-identity problem, Intransitivity.
