Abstract: This article replies to the generous comments made by Giulia Bistagnino, Maurizio Ferrera and Nicola Riva. From different points of view, all three comments focus on some critical dimensions of equality of capabilities, the conception of equality of opportunity that I defend in my book. While sharing many of the comments made, I try to argue that they do not jeopardize the superiority of equality of capabilities. In any case, the three comments have the great merit of advancing the reflection on equality of capabilities and overall equality of opportunity, bringing to light undervalued issues that require our engagement.

Keywords: Equality of opportunity, Duty to work, Power, Capabilities.
