Rethinking Procreative Responsibility: Replies to Magni, Miccoli and Tripodi

Abstract: This paper offers replies to Magni, Miccoli, and Tripodi's comments on my book Procreative Responsibility and Assisted Reproductive Technologies (2024). I first address Heyed's distinction between actual and potential people, and the moral relevance of intentions and attitudes in procreative responsibility. I then respond to concerns about procreative autonomy, both in terms of social pressure and legal enforcement. Finally, I consider whether my view implies antinatalism and reflect on the alleged right to reproduce.

Keywords: Procreative responsibility, Procreative autonomy, Antinatalism, Genome editing, Ectogenesis.
