More against the Defence of the Principle of Proportionality in War. A Reply to Clotilde Calabi

Abstract: In this paper I call into question Calabi's attempt to defend the principle of proportionality against objections I have previously raised. This principle is premised on the doctrine of double effect. I argue that this doctrine is untenable, and that an agent's intention is irrelevant to the moral evaluation of her action, though it may be relevant to the assessment of her moral responsibility.
