

Una società all'altezza del 'noi-altri'

ALESSIO MUSIO

A society that lives up to the "we-others"

Abstract: This contribution offers an ethical-philosophical interpretation of De Vecchi's La società in persona, emphasizing the need for a social structure that both recognizes and protects the irreducible uniqueness of people. From this standpoint it argues for grounding the phenomenology of the person in a robust ontology, one that affirms the value of human corporeality already at the psycho-physical level, with significant implications for bioethics. Finally, it proposes the concept of 'we, the others' as a key to envisioning a genuinely personal and democratic society, capable of holding together unity and difference.

Keywords: Person, Ontology, Phenomenology, Corporeality, Uniqueness.
