

Francesca Magliulo

Head of Corporate Responsibility, Edison

After completing her classical studies, she graduated from the State University of Milan in modern literature with a major in history. Her final thesis entitled “The photographic image of Montecatini. Technical documentation and propaganda during Fascism” focused on the history of industry. After working with several publishers on the creation of essays and books about the history of enterprise and industrial design, she began her professional carrier in external relations at Edison. Since 2003, she has focused on corporate social responsibility projects and activities related to the cultural and historical heritage of Edison. Since 2009 she has worked as corporate responsibility manager at external relations and communication department of Edison.
